Ship wrecks on the Coast of Normandy In the opening pages of the life of Jean Francois Millet, "Peasant and Painter," begun in Scribner for September, occurs the following simple and graphic description, by Millet himself, of a series of ship wrecks on the coast of Normandy, which formed one of the most striking memories of his childhood. There are not many r. cords of calamities, or series of ca lamities, so extraordinary : 'It was Ali Saints' Day, in the morning we saw that the sea was very rough, and every one said there would be trouble; all the parish was in church; in the middle of mass we saw a man orme in dripping wat, as old sailor, well known for his bravery. He immediately said that as he came along shere he saw several ship, which driven by a fearful wind, would certainly shipwreck on the coast. 'We must go to their assistance,' said he, louder, 'and I have come to say to all who are willing, that we have only just time to put to sea to try and help them. About fifty men offered themselves, and, with out speaking, followed the old sailer. We got to the shore by going down the cliff, and there we soon saw a terrible sight, -several vessels, one behind the other, driving at a frightful speed against the rocks "Our man put their boats to sea, but they had hard y made ten strekes when one boat filled with water and suck, the second was overturoed with the breakers, and the third thrown up on shore. Happily no one was drowned, and all resched the shore. It was easy to see that our boats would be no use to the poor people on the ships. "Meantime the vessels came pearer, and were only a few fathoms from our black cliffs. which were covered with cormerants. The first, whose masts were gone, came like a great mass. Every one on shore saw it coming; no one dared speak. It seemed to me, a child, as if death was playing with a handful of men, whom it intended to crush and drown. An immense wave lifted itself like an augry mountain, and wrapping the vessel brought her near, and a still higher one threw her upon a rock level with missts, and poor drawning creatures. Many swam and then disappeared. Our men throw themselves into the water, and with the old sailor at their head, made the neadous efforts to save them. Several were brought back, but they were either drowned or broken on the

"The sea threw up several hundred, and with them merchandise and food. "A second ship approached. The mists were gone. Every one was on deck, which was full; we saw them all on their knees, and a man in black seemed to bless them. A way: as big as our cliff carried her toward us We thought we heard a shock like the first, but she neld stanch and did not move. The waves best against ber, but she did not bulke. She seemed petrified. In an instant every one pas to sea for it was only two gun shots from shore. A boat was made fast alongside; our boat was filled instantly; one of the boars of the ship put off. threw out placks and boxes, and in balf an hour every one was on shore. The ship had been saved by a rare actident; her bowsprit and forepart had got wedged in between two rocks. The wave which had thrown her on the reefs had preserved her as it by a miracle. She was Eaglish, and the man who blessed his companions was a bishop. Taey were taken to the village and soon after to Cherbourg. "We all went back again to the shore. The third ship was thrown on the breakers, dashed into little bits and no one could be saved. The bodies of the unhappy orew were thrown up on the sand.

"A fourth, fifth, and sixth were lost-ship and cargo-on the rocks. The tempest was terrific. The wind was so violent that it was useless to try to oppose it. It carried off the roofs and the thatch. It whirled so that the birds were killed .- even the guis, which are accustomed, one would think, to sorms. The night was passed in defend ing the hous s Some covered the roots with heavy stones, some carried ladders and poles, and made them fast to the roofs. trees bent to the ground and cracked and split. The fields were covered with prepense and leaves. It was a fearful source fue n x; day. All Sou's' Day, the men re erged, to the shore; it was covered with dead bodies and wreck-ge. They were taken up and placed in rows along the fact of the ciffs. Several other vers is came to sight; every one Was lost on our world. Not one could be savid , The rock smasted them like glass, and throw them in atoms to the cliff. "Passing a bollow place, I saw a great sail covering what looked like a pile of merchandise. I lifted the corner and saw a heap of dead bodies. I was so trightened that I can all the way home, where I found mother and grandmother praying for the drowned men. The third day another vessel came. Ot this one they found possible to save part of the crew, shout ten men, whom they got off the rocks, They were all torn and braised. They were taken to Gracky, cared for a month, and sent to Cherbourg. But the poor wretches were not rid of the sea. They embarked on a vessel going to Havre; a storm took them, and they were all lost. As for the dead all the horses were employed for a week in carrying them to the cemetery. They were buried in unconsecurated ground; people said they were not good Christiane.
